[Student Name],

I too found it rewarding to work with the children...or some of them at least. I know what you are talking about when you mentioned their excitement when they remembered a hard word from the previous session. That was rewarding for them but also for us. I think It is interesting how you mentioned that the children had a certain schedule or order of operations that they went by when reading with you. I noticed that same thing when I was reading with the children and I found that to be very encouraging. It was nice to see that the kids felt as if they knew which way they learned best. If that was indeed their reasoning behind being set in their ways, more power to them!
